A LOOK BACK AT LESLIEVILLE'S INDUSTRIAL PAST

HERITAGE TORONTO

100 DUNDAS ST. W. TORONTO, ONT. M5T 1A5

Leslieville has undergone vast changes since its 20th-century industrial days. In the Dundas Carlaw area you can easily find remnants of the neighbourhood's former industrial glory intertwined with the modern-day fabric.

STREET MAPS OF LESLIEVILLE

1889

In the 19th century, brick making and market gardening were the biggest industries in Leslieville. Clay was excavated from large pits and fired into bricks on Greenwood Ave while on Logan Ave gardeners grew fruits and vegetables.

20th century industry

Soon after the turn of the century John Russell, owner of a considerable amount of Leslieville land and one of the largest brickyard's in Canada lost part of his property in the Dundas-Carlaw area over back taxes. The city decided to sell off Russell's land for industrial use.

1906

Industries began to migrate to the area starting in 1906. The first major factory was built by the makers of Chiclets chewing gum. Well-known companies that built factories in the Dundas-Carlaw neighbourhood also included the Wrigley Company and Woods Manufacturing.

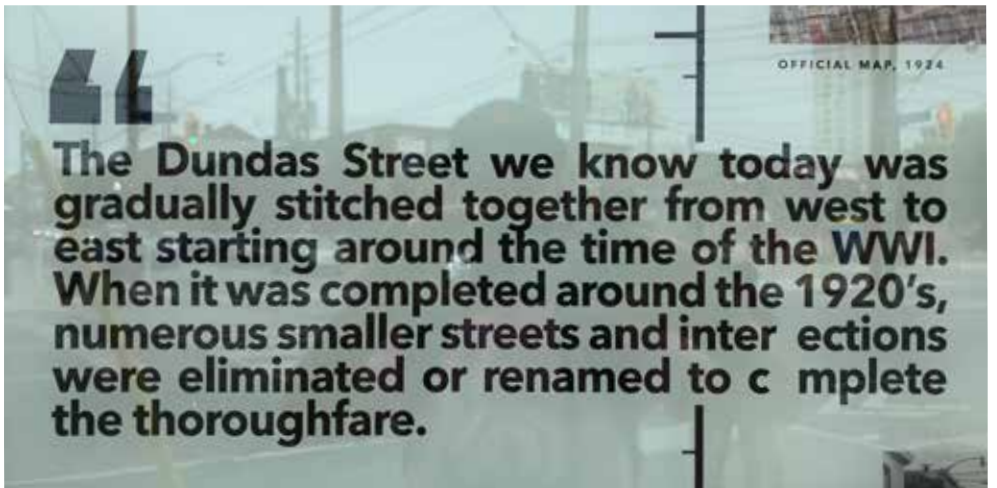

Other factors contributed to the industrialization of the area: Leslieville was annexed into Toronto in 1909 and transportation links, such as the Grand Trunk Railway and the Queen streetcar, connected the neighbourhood to the city and the rest of Canada.

1950's

After the Second World War, industry began to decline across North America. In the 1950s and 60s, companies moved from city centres to the suburbs where land was affordable and there was better access to major highways. Notably, Wrigley moved from Carlaw Avenue to Don Mills in 1962.

STREETSCAPE TRANSFORMATION

Following the departure of the manufacturing sector, many of the former factories and buildings in Leslieville were re-purposed for service-based industries, like restaurants, cafes, and shops, or as small studios.

1970's

The streetcar tracks curving north were part of the lost Harbord line, which once snaked its way from the Danforth. The route was abandoned when the Bloor line opened in 1966

With a growing number of people in the area, the city is providing a variety of public realm improvements for the surrounding residential and working community.
