THE OLD SWIMMING HOLE

By John Kuna, 2009

This mural portrays a light-hearted scene at a once-functioning sawmill Mimico Creek on property now owned by the Islington Golf Club. The sawmill was built circa 1816 by Amasa Wilcox and was located .5 Km. north of Dundas Street West. Wilcox sold the property to Edward Musson in 1843.

Although there are no pictures of this sawmill, historical interpreters suggest it would have been a wooden structure of one or two storeys with a vertical saw powered by a water wheel. Over time, as more and more settlers cleared their land of forest, the volume of water flowing through the mill began to diminish. By 1870, the power had reduced to a level where the mill could no longer operate.

The mill pond then became a favourite swimming hole for generations of young Islington residents. The mural also provides a fanciful look at the swimwear of earlier times as Kuna references an impressionist style.

In 1844, William Gamble, a miller on the Humber River and the first Reeve of Etobicoke, donated this site on the shoreline of prehistoric Lake Iroquis to the local Church of England congregation. On October 17, 1847, the church, a simple, lofty spired structure designed by William Tyrrell of Weston, was dedicated by The Rt. Reverend John Strachan, first Bishop of Toronto. In 1894, under the guidance of Ford Howland, the plaster exterior of the church was bricked and buttressed and the Tyrrell spire retained. St. George's is the only historic church in Etobicoke whose original building is incorporated within the present structure.

Erected by a parishioner and the Ontario Ministry of Culture and Recreation.

THE OLD TOLL GATE HOUSE

Established as a toll road under the Turnpike Act of 1833, this road, now Dundas Street, was the primary route for commerce and stage coach travel between Toronto and South Western Ontario. Money paid by travellers was to pay for the upkeep of the road.

This was the site of Toll Gate House number Five.

Tolls were charged for each horse and rider, hog, cow or sheep driven along the road, and each wagon depending on the load and whether drawn by one horse or two. There was no charge for funerals or going to church on Sunday and no toll for the military.

vehicle drawn by one horse	1 pence
vehicle drawn by two horses	1½ pence
20 sheep or 20 hogs	½ pence
horse and rider or led horse	½ pence

Located here from 1857, the toll gate house was subsequently used as a dwelling unit until it was demolished in 1958 to make way for a gas station.

THE MALTESE COMMUNITY OF TORONTO

Top: Paul the Apostle Church, 1930. Given to the community by the construction of a new church on the same site in 1960. (The Toronto Archives Historical Society Archives)

Members of the Federation of Maltese Organizations. Peter Maffei, Canadian Ambassador at St. Paul the Apostle's church (left, 1960). Collection of Richard Linder.

A small number of immigrants from Malta first arrived in Toronto in the late 19th century. By 1916, having fled overpopulation and unemployment, some 200 Maltese had established themselves in Toronto in two communities. One was the area of Dundas and McCaul Streets, and the other here in The Junction, near present-day Maltra Park. Many worked in this district's meat packing industry that was generated by the nearby Union Stock Yards (since demolished). The Maltese-Canadian Society of Toronto, established in 1922, supported the two growing communities.

Predominantly Roman Catholics, the Maltese living in The Junction first attended nearby St. Cecilia Church. In 1930, with aid from the Maltese-Canadian Society of Toronto, the community built St. Paul the Apostle Church on Dundas Street West. It was one of the first Maltese churches in North America. After the Second World War, more Maltese emigrated to Canada and settled in this neighbourhood. The resulting density of Maltese homes, businesses, and community organizations gave this area the name "Little Malta".
